God's labourers, employees, or both? The employment status of Catholic priests in Australia.

Question

Are Catholic priests employees according to the common law of Australia? Can the theory of political pluralism be used to argue that Catholic priests should not be regarded as employees?

CHRISTOPHER JACKSON.

Student Number: 40190951
CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION .................................................................1
OVERVIEW .................................................................1
SECTION ONE: RECENT DEVELOPMENTS ..................................3
   A) Ermenogen v Greek Orthodox Community of SA Inc.
      1. The High Court majority.
      2. Kirby J.
   B) Percy v Board of National Mission of the Church of Scotland.
   C) Why reject the presumption?
      1. Presumptions are unhelpful and distracting.
      2. The interests of ‘justice’.
      3. Separating the ‘spiritual’ and the ‘temporal’.
   D) Implications of Section One.

SECTION TWO: ARE PRIESTS EMPLOYEES? ...............................7
   A) Existing case law.
   B) Intention to create legal relations.
      1. Objective intention.
      2. The Church’s position.
      3. The Appointment.
      4. Payment.
      5. Taxation, Insurance and Superannuation.
      7. Housing.
   C) Is there a contract of employment?
      1. An ecclesiastical office holder?
      2. Employee or independent contractor?
   D) Is there an employer?
      1. The party authorising payment.
      2. The Diocese.
      3. Trustees of the Roman Catholic Church.
      4. The Bishop.
      5. Difficulties in identifying an employer ‘ought not to stand in the way’.
   E) The clergy abuse scandal.
   F) Implications of Section Two.