Werewolves, Wings, and Other Weird Transformations: Fantastic Metamorphosis in Children’s and Young Adult Fantasy Literature

Shelley Bess Chappell
B. A. (Hons)

Thesis submitted in fulfilment of requirements for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in the Department of English

Division of Humanities
Macquarie University

October 2007
TABLE OF CONTENTS

Abstract

Declaration

Acknowledgements

Introduction:

1. Generic Parameters and Terminology
   i. Fantasy as a Genre
   ii. Fantastic Metamorphosis Narratives
2. Literature Review
3. Methodology
   i. Ideology
   ii. The Analysis of Fantastic Metamorphosis as Metaphor
      a. Basic Approaches: Linguistic metaphors and the 'metaphoric mode'
      b. Fantasy as a Metaphoric Mode
      c. Analysing Fantasy Motifs as Metaphors
      d. How Motif Metaphors Convey Ideologies
      e. The Benefits of an Analysis of Fantasy as Metaphor
   iii. Relevant Interpretive Frameworks and Discourses of Otherness
4. Chapter Outlines

Chapter 1: Fantastic Metamorphosis as Childhood 'Otherness'

1. Analytic Context: Constructions of Childhood
2. The Grounds for Othering Childhood: Biological and Cognitive Differences
   i. Mutability: The Corporeal Basis for Childhood Otherness — Fluid Bodies and Subjective Potentiality
   ii. Primitivism: The Cognitive Basis for Childhood Otherness — Primeval Minds and Leaky Animal Bodies
3. A Potentially Abject Otherness
   i. The Redemption of Animals
   ii. Functionality: Salvationary Potential and Developmental Self-Exploration
   iii. An Inexorable Biological Impetus Towards Adult Normality
   iv. The Powers of Socialisation: Malleable children

Conclusion
Chapter 2: The Metamorphic Growth of Wings: Deviant Development and Adolescent Hybridity

1. Deviant Development: Themes of Surveillance and Spectacle
   i. Normative Development and Institutional Surveillance
   ii. Stigma and Spoiled Identities
   iii. Scopophobia: The Fear of Becoming a Negative Spectacle
2. Hybrid Bodies: Metaphors of Regression or Progression
   i. Regressive Hybridity and Progressive Conformity: Rejecting Childhood and Adolescence
   ii. Progressive Hybridity and Progressive Non-Conformity: Integrating Child and Adolescent Qualities with Adulthood

Conclusion

Chapter 3: Tenors of Maturation: Developing Powers and Changing Identities

1. Attaining Adult Power: The Possibility of Becoming Monstrous
   i. Biting Back: Potential Adolescent Monstrosity
   ii. Internalizing a Disciplinary Gaze and Accepting Moral Agency iii. Monstrosity or Mere Masculinity? Empathetic Boys and Harmless Monstering Around
   iv. Intersubjective Moral Agency Achieved 2. Becoming an Adult Self: The Continuity or Discontinuity of Identity
   i. Ideologies of Identity Change
   ii. Spatio-Temporal Mass and an Embedded Core
   iii. Behavioural Consistency: Character and Subject Positioning
   iv. Memory: Links Between Past, Present, and Future Selves
   v. Recognition from Others
   vi. Blended Ideologies of Identity

Conclusion

Chapter 4: Changing Representations of Werewolves: Ideologies of Racial and Ethnic Otherness

1. The Abhorrent Beast Within: Negative Attitudes
   i. Monstrous Werewolves
   ii. Sympathetic Werewolves
2. The Accepted Beast Within: Redeemed Otherness
   i. Idealised Werewolves
   ii. Non-Essentialist Werewolves
   iii. Multicultural and Incommensurable Werewolves

Conclusion
ABSTRACT

My central thesis is that fantastic motifs work on a metaphorical level to encapsulate and express ideologies that have frequently been naturalised as 'truths'. I develop a theory of motif metaphors in order to examine the ideologies generated by the fantastic motif of metamorphosis in a range of contemporary children's and young adult fantasy texts. Although fantastic metamorphosis is an exceptionally prevalent and powerful motif in children's and young adult fantasy literature, symbolising important ideas about change and otherness in relation to childhood, adolescence, and maturation, and conveying important ideologies about the world in which we live, it has been little analysed in children's literature criticism. The detailed analyses of particular metamorphosis motif metaphors in this study expand and refine our academic understanding of the metamorphosis figure and consequently provide insight into the underlying principles and particular forms of a variety of significant ideologies.

By examining several principal metamorphosis motif metaphors, I investigate how a number of specific cultural beliefs are constructed and represented in contemporary children's and young adult fantasy literature. I particularly focus upon metamorphosis as a metaphor for childhood otherness; adolescent hybridity and deviant development; maturation as a process of self-change and physical empowerment; racial and ethnic difference and otherness; and desire and jouissance. I apply a range of pertinent cultural theories to explore these motif metaphors fully, drawing on the interpretive frameworks most appropriate to the concepts under consideration. I thus employ general psychoanalytic theories of embodiment, development, language, subjectivity, projection, and abjection; poststructuralist, social constructionist, and sociological theories; and wide-ranging literary theories, philosophical theories, gender and feminist theories, race and ethnicity theories, developmental theories, and theories of fantasy and animality. The use of such theories allows for incisive explorations of the explicit and implicit ideologies metaphorically conveyed by the motif of metamorphosis in different fantasy texts.

In this study, I present a number of specific analyses that enhance our knowledge of the motif of fantastic metamorphosis and of significant cultural ideologies. In doing so, I provide a model for a new and precise approach to the analysis of fantasy literature.
Declaration

I certify that this work has not been submitted for a higher degree to any other university or institution.

Shelley Chappell
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This thesis would never have been written without the immense support of my parents, Maggie and Kevin Chappell, who have given me all the love and guidance necessary to achieve this goal. I am very thankful for their constant encouragement and aid over the four years of my research.

It has been a privilege and a pleasure to work with my associate supervisor, Professor John Stephens, over the course of my degree. He has given me faultless advice and constructive criticism. Despite his extremely busy schedule, he has always been willing to make time to discuss my project with me. My primary supervisor, Dr. Robyn McCallum, has challenged me to clarify my arguments and improve the way I express my ideas. I am very grateful to Dr. Anna Smith, from the School of Culture, Literature, and Society at the University of Canterbury. I cannot thank her enough for acting as my external supervisor when financial difficulties made it necessary for me to complete the final year of my research in my hometown of Christchurch. Dr. Smith read several of my chapters and gave me incisive advice and much needed encouragement.

I further wish to thank all the staff and postgraduate students of the English Department at Macquarie University for their companionship, particularly when I was in need of support and inspiration. Special thanks go to my friends and colleagues Beppie Keane, Christine Boman, Simona Achitei, Yvonne Hammer, Ursula Dubosarsky, Yu-Chi Liu, and Victoria Flanagan. My 'non-PhD' friends in both New Zealand and Australia have been incredible and I am grateful for their patience and encouragement. I especially wish to thank Gareth Ayling, Jeffrey Fisher, Anne Shave, Wendy Dalley, and David Smith for their willingness to listen and make suggestions.

Finally, I am grateful for the research scholarship I received from Macquarie University, which funded the first three years of my degree.